Orland R. N. A. Add New Members

At the meeting on August 10th. of the Orland Park Laurel Camp of the R. N. A., added two new members to their roll of Neighbors, Mrs. Nora Felton and Miss Ruth Ludwig.

The ladies all wore their new white dresses and made an impressive appearance. The degree work was exemplified with a smoothness and excellence that showed the results of the evenings of practice the members have put in. A very pleasing feature of the event was the conferring of the degree upon her daughter Ruth, by the Oracle, Mrs. Loretta Ludwig.

The float which represented the camp in the recent Legion parade, brought much favorable comment and was the result of the combined labors of most of the neighbors under the direction of the float committee, Mrs. Ray Doctor, Mrs. Hilda Cox, Mrs. Clista Margolis. They were much gratified at winning a prize award of $10 for their efforts.

The hostesses for the evening were Mrs. Mary Cox, Mrs. Florence Wagner and Mrs. Hilda Cox. Following the meeting bunco was played and refreshments were served.

The next meeting will be Sept. 14 with Mrs. Minnie Davidson and Mrs. Anna Yunker as hostesses.

Mrs. Maria Smith and Mrs. Mollie Reish are reported on the sick list. Mrs. Marie Heiting is much improved from her recent illness. It is hoped that the sick members will be able to attend the next meeting.

War On Birds

Editor News-Bulletin: Here is a bird story I wish you would publish:

Bird hunters can at last hunt to their hearts content without fearing game deputies or outraged citizens demanding their life. For the last three months Plainfield has been suffering under an epidemic of purple grackles. Countless numbers of the birds are nesting in a group of pine trees on a road three blocks out of the downtown area. Neighbors have been shooting at the birds with shotguns, bee-bee guns and any available fire arm. Along about sundown the birds begin a din that can be heard for blocks around and angry residents have killed as many as 200 in a night. All hunters are welcome and will be given the keys of the city if they succeed in driving the birds away.

Tinley Man Breaks Into Movies

Tinley Park is proud over the news that one of its citizens has entered the movies. The following article appeared in the Sunday Tribune relative to Hal Boyer breaking into the movies:

At Fox Western Avenue studio Hal Boyer, Northwestern, 1932, who pushed his large athletic frame through the closely guarded movie studio gates to accost James Ryan, casting director, who said: "You ought to photograph well, and perhaps you can act. There is a small part in Director Kenneth Mackenna's film, 'Walls of Gold,' that you may be able to act in while it serves as a screen test for you at the same time. The part's that of a young ex-college man working as a bartender in a swank speakeasy. I suppose you can mix and shake drinks."

Boyer said he would report in the morning. Next morning Ryan's phone rang. A tired voice—the voice of a man who had been up all night—said: "This is Hal Boyer. I have been practicing and I can do that bartender job now."

Boyer not only filled the bit well, but pleased the camera and sound track exactions so neatly that he got the chance to engage in film repartee with the principals, Sally Eilers and Norman Foster, and now it looks as if his film career will be sprouting alongside of Miss Lund's. Young Boyer, who played on the Illinois A. C. water polo team as well as all the Northwestern water teams, is 23 years old, 6 feet 2, weighs 188, has curly brown hair and gray-blue eyes and was born in Neuss on the Rhine, where his father, John F. Boyer, one of the McCormick company veterans, was representative of the International Harvester Company. He spoke little English until he was ten, and his father was ordered back to this country. He came to the coast with the I. A. C. swimmers to try for the Olympic games last summer and stayed to play roles in the Pasadena Community playhouse productions of "Lightnin'" and "Peer Gvnt." His folks live in Tinley Park, Ill.

Mr. and Mrs. Boyer and Will Fitchau saw him in "In Storm at Daybreak" in Chicago. He has a mustache.

These Wednesday night band concerts will be held every Wednesday night as long as the weather permits.

Six More Miles of Wolf Road Paved In Cook County

Cook County is showing quite a lot of activity on Wolf road. Six miles of this road are being paved. Three miles from Irving Park boulevard to Higgins road are now under construction. Three miles of new paving from North avenue to Franklin avenue have been opened during last week.

Cook County realizes the value of the Wolf road as an outer belt line for Chicago and will pave this road clear across the county. The highway will be connected up with 143rd street soon as possible.

Wolf road in Will county is a dead issue on account of the Cleveland right of way squabble and nothing has been done by the state's attorney regarding the condemnation suit which the county ordered some time ago.

Those men in Will County who have a vision for the future are still working to bring about the paving of Wolf road from the Hickory Creek bridge to the Lincoln Highway south to route 51.

Certain obstructionists are doing all they can to block this plan, but Wolf road is too important a highway to let a few mis-guided individuals stop. Frankfort township is entitled to this important road and the road boosters in this township are determined to carry on the fight until this highway is completed in Will County. The News-Bulletin stands 100 per cent for this program and will do all in its power to help carry on the fight for the completion of Wolf road.

Tinley Lions Plan Activities; New Officers to be Installed

The Tinley Park Lions Club after a period of inactivity, have re-organized with a closed club of fourteen active members and are planning a program of real Lion activities.

The Club held their regular meeting Tuesday evening, at the Vogt Department Store.

Plans for the coming season were discussed. There seemed to be more optimism amongst the members present than for a long time.

All voted that Lionism is here to stay and that it is a constructive force for the betterment of any community in which a club is located and also that the Tinley Park Lions Club still intends to carry on and that it will represent Tinley Park in the parent organization, the Lions International as it should be.

Next Thursday evening, August 24th there will be a special meeting for the installation of the new officers for the coming year.

After the installation the Lions will meet at Ray Brennan's Tavern at 159th st. and Keane Ave., and will partake of a fish fry for which Ray's place is gaining great popularity.

Future activities of the Lions club will be announced later.

Thru the generosity of H. C. Vogt, the Lions Club will be provided with a club room in the Vogt building formerly occupied by the Oesterreich flower shop. This place will be fitted up for permanent headquarters very shortly.

HOOTY, THE OWL, DISCOVERS WHAT IS GOING ON

To-who! To-who! To-who-who-who!

What may a hungry fellow do?

SO SAID Hooty the Owl as he waited for the Black Shadows to creep out from the Purple Hills. It was just the hour when Hooty always is hungry. You see he had had nothing to eat since just before daylight that morning, and then it had been a mere bite, a careless little mouse. All day Hooty had slept in the top of his favorite tree in the loneliest part of the Green Forest. Now he was wide awake and waiting only for Mr. Sun to go to bed, taking with him his children, the Jolly Little Sunbeams. You see Hooty the Owl does not like them. They try to blind him. They never succeed, for though many people don't think so, Hooty can see very well indeed in daytime, but the dusk is easier on his big eyes, and so he waits until Mr. Sun has gone to bed, to do his hunting.

Now one of the first places Hooty visits every night is the Smiling Pool. Hooty always has taken great interest in all that goes on in the Smiling Pool. Had he a mind to, Hooty could tell dark stories of things which have happened in the Smiling Pool, strange disappearances among the little people who live there. At least they were strange to all but Hooty. The truth is, in or around the Smiling Pool Hooty has found many a good dinner.

In his own peculiar way Hooty is clever. He is very clever indeed. You know how he flies without making a sound, for all the world like a drifting shadow. But with all his cleverness Hooty never had been able to catch Jerry Muskrat. He had tried times enough, goodness knows. Ever since Jerry was big enough to leave his mother, and even before, Hooty had tried and tried to catch Jerry. At first it was because Jerry was young and tender. Now it was because he was so big and would make such a satisfying dinner.

As he waited for the change to the Black Shadows, Hooty was thinking of Jerry and wondering why it was he had seen him so seldom during the past summer. The reason was that having no house in the Smiling Pool, Jerry had lived in his castle in the bank of the Laughing Brook. Hooty had not known this.

At last it was dark enough to suit him and on silent wings Hooty sailed out from the Green Forest straight for the Smiling Pool. As he drew near he saw right away that the water was quite muddy and that it was mud-diest near a certain place beyond the Big Rock. Hooty was interested. He turned so as to sail over the Big Rock and then saw that something was going on underneath. For just an instant Jerry's head appeared. That was enough. Hooty understood. Chuckling softly, Hooty turned back toward the Green Forest.

"I know what's going on," he chuckled. "I know what's going on. He's building a new house. By and by it will be above water. He will be so busy building he may forget to watch out. If he does I am just the fellow who wants to be around. Just let him once forget when I am about and he will have no more use for a new house. Now I'll stay away from the Smiling Pool for a few nights. It won't do to have him see me about."

OUR CHILDREN

By ANGELO PATRI

CHECK UP NOW

CHECK up on your school child's work. Study his latest report card. If there are signs that he is falling in a subject, if any of his marks are falling off, take up the matter at once. Talk first to the child and remember that your attitude on this is of first importance.

If you take the tone that the child has neglected his work and disgraced himself you won't get very far. Go about it gently. Ask him where he thinks the trouble is and when he says, "Aw, she never gives me a chance," don't fly up at him and end the conference in a tense situation. Listen. Keep on listening. Let him say all he has to say in his own defense and question him further. By and by he will begin to disclose something of his difficulty and that is what you need.

After you have talked to the boy go to see the teacher. Once more you must go about your task tactfully and in the spirit of helpfulness. The teacher is your partner, your working partner, and unless she is with you strongly you are not going to succeed. Tell the teacher you want to do all you can to keep the child progressing steadily and ask her what you can do. Then plan with her. Don't be satisfied until you can answer these questions:

Why is the child falling behind? What must be done first to make up the falling? How much more work has he to cover before the term end? Can you see a way clear for him to accomplish it? Can you make a schedule of work that will enable the child to complete his work well within the time and allow him some time for review and reorganization?

You see you have not only to bring the child up to the standard just now, you have to plan to help him maintain that standard. You cannot do the work for him but you can so organize his work in co-operation with the teacher that he can carry on for himself. All you can do, once you have found the difficulty, strengthened it, laid out the term plan, is to stand on the sidelines and coach and cheer. He must do the rest.

If sickness has kept a child from school and cost him his standing don't try to make it up at one bite. Talk things over with the teacher. Scale down the subject matter to the essentials. It is surprising how much easier this makes the child's work.

Sometimes a special program will enable a child to make up lessons. This can usually be obtained by asking for it at the school. Drill will not help clear up misunderstanding lessons. Get the facts right, the understanding clear before you begin the drill.

I LOST IT

"TOM, where is your cap?"

"I lost it."

"You lost it? Where?"

"I don't know."

"You don't know. Do you suppose that all I have to do is buy you one cap after another? Now you go look for that cap until you find it."

"I don't know where to look."

"Neither do I. You lost it. You go find it."

After a brief interval Tom comes back. "Well, did you find it?"

"No. I looked everywhere but it isn't there."

"I suppose so. I'll have to buy you another cap. That makes five this term. I don't know what is going to come of you if you don't take care of your things."

Why buy him another one? It won't hurt him to do without his cap. Many a boy never wears a cap, except on very stormy days. Even if he has to go to church and Sunday school hatless, what of it? He doesn't wear a hat in church anyway. And if he really wanted a cap he wouldn't lose it so many times.

I believe that is true. If a child truly wants a thing he won't lose it save rarely. He is conscious of the thing he wants to keep. He loses a thing he is not conscious of wanting. The way to get him to keep his hat is to make him conscious of needing it. That you do by letting him go without it.

That goes for other things that he loses and forgets. Do not replace it and make him go without until he replaces it if possible.

A child forgets and loses the things he doesn't want to keep in mind or pocket. The poor report is lost or forgotten. The good one, never.

When you find that a child is forgetting certain things, losing other things, habitually, consider the reason. Study why he wants to lose or forget. There is always a reason. The child's mind is always on his side. It helps him to forget and to lose undesirable thoughts. It closes them out with a finality that is as complete as darkness at midnight. Find the reason.

Don't accuse the child of willfully forgetting. He does not willfully forget or lose the unpleasant thing or idea. He is unconscious of his desire to forget and to lose. Remove the cause of his desire and put something desirable in its stead. Give him experiences that will make him conscious of his need to remember and hold on, and he will do both.

FOR SUMMER MEALS

COCKTAILS are always a refreshing beginner for a luncheon or dinner. During the warm weather the melons of various kinds make especially attractive cocktails or fruit salads. Scoop out the balls of melon, using a small French potato cutter; serve with any sauce that appeals to the taste. A lemon sirup over muskmelon is well liked as is a ginger sirup, using some of the preserved ginger as a garnish.

Red Raspberry Whip

Set a bowl into a pan of crushed ice. Into the bowl put one and one-half cups of ripe berries, one cup of powdered sugar and the white of an egg. Beat with a wire egg beater until the mixture holds its shape. Pile lightly on a fancy glass serving dish and surround with fresh macaroons. Serve with a chilled boiled custard.

Junket in Cups.

Heat a pint of milk until luke warm, add one-fourth of a cupful of sugar and a junket tablet, crushed and added to a tablespoonful of vanilla. Turn into sherbet glasses and let stand in a warm place until set. Then chill. When ready to serve top each portion with a raspberry sauce.

Frozen Plum Pudding.

Melt three squares of chocolate over hot water, add one-fourth cupful of sugar and one-fourth cupful of boiling water, stir and cook until smooth and glossy. Scald one quart of milk, one cupful each of heavy cream and one cupful of sugar in a double boiler. Add the chocolate mixture and a tablespoonful of vanilla, one junket tablet dissolved in one tablespoonful of cold water. Set the mixture in a warm place until it jellies. Add one-half pound of mixed fruits soaked over night in a thin sirup to cover, seeded raisins, shredded candied cherries, candied pineapple and shredded citron. Drain and pack in a fluted mold lined with lady fingers, cover and let stand in equal measures of ice and salt.

TO GET IT DONE

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

THOUGH doing something here and there Around the house takes thought and care And time and strength, the greater task

Is not to do it but to ask, Though doing something seems to be A burden, we shall learn to see There always is a greater one, And that is getting something done.

There always is a thing or two Around the house the rest could do, And so we say to someone near, "I wish you'd fix this matter here." If they would only just refuse We'd save a lot of time we lose; Would say they won't, we'd go ahead; Alas, they say they will instead.

And, making this a better earth, Their promises have equal worth. Whoever may perceive the need Must do the thinking, then the deed. The rest our wisdom may approve But always nod and never move. We must not ask of anyone, Must do a thing to get it done.

Quench Oil Fire With Water

Defying the belief that oil fires could not be extinguished with water, a German fire chief set fire to a pool of 250 gallons of crude oil and extinguished it in twenty seconds after the water was turned on.

More Crochet

There is no lessening in enthusiasm for hand crochet. If you can crochet, here is an outfit you will be eager to start making right away, and the time and energy spent on it will reap rich reward in terms of ultra chic. Then, too, this trio of hat, gloves and sweater will prove a treasure in your wardrobe in that it is eminently practical and will be found always ready to wear since, being crocheted of white cotton, it launders. Loose mesh and tight crochet stitches are cleverly combined to make the high-yoke sweater.

GRAPHIC GOLF

CORRECT STROKING

THERE are various ways of practicing putting. Walter Travis used to use a miniature cup and stroke the ball by imagining he was driving a tack into the back of it. Other players have laid out a chalk line and putt along it or parallel to it. Many players have practiced only on the green itself, sometimes using a spot in direct line to the hole to putt over. All good golfers are agreed however that the ball must be struck accurately and precisely to gain best results. Some golfers have gone so far as to use this phase alone in their practice with beneficial results. Instead of aiming at some particular target and gauging the range accordingly, they practice only correct stroking and accurate contact with the ball. Their whole mind is concentrated on the stroke with no attention at all as to where the ball may finish. In this way a sound putting stroke is soon achieved.

John D., Jr., Helps Save the Palisades

HERE is an interesting view of the land, extending thirteen miles north from the new George Washington bridge across the Hudson, which has been given to the Palisades park commissioners by John D. Rockefeller, Jr. The tract is 265 acres in extent and its acquisition by the commissioners is a great aid in the movement to save the picturesque Palisades for the public.

THE INEVITABLE CONSEQUENCE

By Cosmo Hamilton

©, 1933, McClure Newspaper Syndicate, WNU Service

COME into a nice apartment in a house on Every street. It is lunch time, but breakfast is on the table. These two have been married a little less than a month.

Darling—and she is a darling—is sitting at the table, alone. You can hear his grampus-like splashing in the bathroom near at hand. Everything on the table is as cold as ice. When the door is flung open she holds out her arms to the husband by whom she has been deserted for a very long time. Ten minutes at least, that is.

"Darling!" Her golden head goes awfully well with his blue and white dressing gown.

"What an age I've been away." He is tall and square and young and simple, with a kink in his hair. "And now for breakfast. You must be starving. It's a rotten trick to have made you wait . . ." He sees that she has finished and that everything is cold. He used to be extremely fussy a month ago about everything being hot.

"I was so frightfully lonely I've had mine," she says. "I'll heat another for you."

"Oh, no, that's all right."

"But the coffee's gone sulky," she says.

"Yes, but I love it that way."

"And the toast is like yesterday's paper."

"That's all the same to me."

"But let me cook just one hot thing."

"Why should I care about hot things when I've got you?" he sits at that chilly table with genuine cheerfulness.

Into her warm heart at this there steals a new sense of gravity and a certain touch of fright. "Will you think this way this time next year?"

"Next year and always, until the crack of doom. Have you forgotten what today is? It's the first of May."

"Oh, darling, it's your birthday!"

"No it isn't. It's yours."

"How perfectly wonderful of you to know so much about me." She gives a little cry. "You've bought me a present! Can I believe my eyes?"

"You don't think, do you, that I shall ever let today go by without some little thing?" It's a string of amber beads.

"But this lovely thing must have cost a frightful sum."

He squares his shoulders. "It did. Let me put it on."

And when it is round her little white neck she rushes to a mirror to see how it looks. "I should have been equally happy if you had just remembered," she says.

The same room again. You will notice that some of the pristine freshness of the furniture is gone. The passing of a year has told its tale, you see. But the silver of the breakfast table is all delightfully clean. There is a different breakfast air about Mr. Darling now. With more than a suspicion of irritation he glances at the clock. It points to half-past eight. He calls "Darling! Darling!" sharply because business calls him. He is no less in love than he used to be but he has been married for a year. Money must be earned. The little house, the little wife, her hats and frocks and pleasures depend upon his exertions. A man cannot begin the day well when he has breakfast alone.

She is as pretty as ever, as you will see at once. Better than merely pretty because she wears a charming air of having found herself. She has realized that life is something more than a lingering romance. "Darling!" She puts her arms round his neck.

"Yes, darling, yes." He is not irritable. He is without temper. She is merely late for breakfast and he must get to work. If, instead of eyeing the clock, he had looked into her eyes he would have seen something in them that would have made him catch his breath.

Her voice, however, is just as delicious and equable as it always is. "I haven't seen you for hours." She tucks herself into a napkin, takes the proffered sausage and gets down to it.

"Why can't you have your bath at night and be punctual in the morning? I loathe the beginning of the day on every thing gone cold."

"But it's a lovely warm day."

"What are you doing today?"

"Marking the new towels, sewing on all the buttons which the laundry has taken away, picking the dead leaves off my dear geraniums and lying down in the afternoon in order to be fit for tonight."

"Are you dining with some one, then?" His voice is rather sharp.

"Yes—at the Plaza—with you."

"At the Plaza with me? With steel more like old scrap iron than it's ever been before?"

"Then you're taking me to the theater where we shall get up an excellent appetite for supper at the Savoy."

"You can't be feeling well," says he, after the usual dramatic pause.

"I was feeling fine," but her little laugh was hyphenated to a tear. "Have you noticed today's paper by any chance?"

"Yes, of course. Why? Money, golf, murders . . ."

"Then you know the date?"

"Yes, the first of May."

"That's why you're taking me to the Plaza and the theater and then to the Savoy—even in these hard times."

"What is the matter with you? I shall call up the doctor . . ." Like a little girl who's been badly hurt she bursts into tears. "Darling, what is it? What are you crying about?"

"You've forgotten—you've forgotten. And only a year ago you said you'd never forget."

"Oh, what a brute I am! I'm so sorry. I'll never forget again."

Come with me once more.

There are many drastic changes in that pretty little room. There's a rattle on the floor, a woolen baby's stocking over the back of a chair, and, in an attitude of assurance, bang in the middle of the sofa, a large brown teddy bear.

Husband and father comes in. His step is very brisk. He's deeply disappointed when he finds an empty room and he throws a look of resentment at the one from which his son and heir now dominates the place. He tries to drink the coffee but it is much too hot. He goes sharply to the door but he doesn't knock. He taps. He taps again and still there is no response. Then his patience goes. "Darling, for Lord's sake, come and have breakfast. I loathe having it alone every blessed day. Everything's so beastly hot, too."

The door opens softly and there is wife and mother, her finger held up.

"Ssh, darling, ssh!"

He catches hold of her. "I shall make all the noise I like. Is he paying for this house or am I, I should like to know?"

"Oh, please, you'll wake him up."

"Why not? He ought to be awake. I'll start him off with bad habits—sleeping as late as this."

"If you must shout—whisper, if you love me, do."

He continues his angry outburst, but very much under his breath. "I won't be deserted. I came first. Be fair. Am I never to see you alone? Come and have breakfast with me."

She submits to being pulled. "Oh, be careful about the door."

At the breakfast table, she smiles. Even in his present state he is bound to own to himself that her smile would light up the darkest tunnel.

"When I kissed him just now he knew me—I'm perfectly certain he did," she says. "And I'm perfectly certain he understands every word I say. Isn't it wonderful?"

"Why? His parents are far above the average intelligence."

"Listen!"

"What is it?" There is anxiety in his voice.

"I'm sure I heard him sigh."

"No, it's nurse blowing her nose."

"I think I'd better go."

"All right. But don't forget you're dining with me at the Plaza tonight."

"Oh, but I can't leave the boy."

"This is the first of May. Have you forgotten what that means to me?"

"Forgotten? Because it's the first of May I'm not going out tonight. I'm going to stay with my boy."

"Our boy?"

"And with the money you would have wasted on dinner and all that, you're going to buy something that would be very useful for him."

She kisses him, goes to the door on tiptoes, blows him a dividend and creeps into the room.

With a high head and a proud heart he watches her disappear, and then gives the impertinent teddy a punch in the chest. What? . . . But that tactless teddy stands for more than a mere stuffed thing. It makes life doubly worth the living, good and purposeful. And so he picks him by the paw, and with great politeness and friendship, to say nothing of gratitude, seats him in the empty chair which is opposite to his own.

"Have a sausage, old boy?"

Blame Lack of Oxygen for Solons' Stupidity

The scientific explanation of the proverbial slowness and dullness in congress, or in any large gathering of persons indoors, is that lack of oxygen in the stale, warm, humid air causes the individuals to fall into a mental stupor fatal to intelligence and courage.

Improved ventilation is not enough, according to a member of the French chamber of deputies who has introduced a bill to remedy these conditions, although this would help. Bodily movement is also required to quicken the heart and cause deep breathing, thus renewing the stagnant air which may have been unchanged for hours in the deeper part of the lungs. The deputy, who is also something of a scientist, recommends that short compulsory recesses be taken at frequent intervals during the day, and that the members walk about in the open air.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Record California Loss

The taxable wealth of California has dropped $1,316,965,641 since 1931, which is the greatest loss in the history of the state, according to the state board of equalization. Last year the records showed the state was worth $9,398,900,983. The findings of the board, based on current tax rolls of the counties, show the state is worth $8,081,944,342, which is a shrinkage of 14.01 per cent in a year.

Old Problem of "Wagging Tongue"

Only Regrets Come From Following Up Hasty Angry Words.

"The summer vacation is always a problem," writes one of our readers, "but this year it was specially so. Oh, we knew where we were going, to the seashore, a charming place within commuting distance of my husband's office. But the problem was about my mother, who lives with us. Each year she says we should be separated for vacations. I know my husband feels the same way, and each year I am disturbed over what is best for everyone concerned. I know my mother really wants to be with us, where she has the children and the comforts of home, and particularly of late years she has come to depend on me so that I know she would be unhappy alone."

"I always hope it will work out that she stays with us, because I know she is well taken care of, her little special diet conscientiously attended to, and if she should not feel well I am right there to do the right thing. She is the type of person who would never send for me, so having her away alone for two months would mean constant uneasiness on my part."

"How happy I was when my husband said the word that gave things a little extra push—gave mother that little extra coaxing. Mother was coming with us; even the children seemed relieved."

"And then one evening, a week or two before we were to leave, my husband came home particularly tired and irritable. For some reason, certainly unknown to herself, mother chose that time to remark annoyingly on a subject on which he is particularly touchy. He made an equally annoying retort, and after mother went to bed he reproached me in a way that gave me a very disturbing feeling regarding the success of the family summer."

"But even then everything would have been all right. The next day my husband had some good news, the clouds passed, everything was forgotten, and in the refreshing atmosphere of the seaside, with taut nerves relaxed, I know things would have taken care of themselves and we should all have been happy together."

"But, things had no chance to work out that way. Because I told. After my husband complained and reproached me I thought I must go into the matter with mother to try to avoid similar happenings in the future. I must make her see my husband's point of view. And that was all that mother needed to set off her own feeling of dissatisfaction. That settled it, she said. She would most certainly not go with us to the beach. The result is a spoiled summer, as far as I am concerned, and I do not know yet what for mother."

"I realize now that sometimes it is impossible to make one person get another's viewpoint; they are all so sure and so eager to be 'right.' And the best thing in those cases is to say as little as possible to let things pass over. If only I hadn't spoken, if only I hadn't told—everything would have blown over."

Summing up the foregoing, these few terse sentences of comment by a prominent woman contributor to our columns, are vital:

HOLD ON TO YOUTH

Let Diet Aid Dentistry

By Marie H. Callahan, Editor
Modern Beauty Shop Magazine

Just because milk, fruits and vegetables don't come wrapped up in fancy tubes or jars accompanied by folders promising elaborate results from their use, we are apt to forget that they are as important in keeping teeth sparkling and white as are the tooth pastes which are so alluringly advertised, for it is not enough to treat the outside of our teeth; we must also pay attention to the inside—that is, we must eat the foods that will supply the materials for building beautiful teeth.

In this business of being beautiful we all have a tendency to "let it go," especially when we are young and can be attractive without much effort. We are apt to think, "Oh, well, later when my teeth begin to ache and my hair loses its gloss and my skin gets leathery—it will be plenty of time to begin taking care of my looks." It's true that modern beauty science can do some quite miraculous things in counteracting the effects of neglecting your appearance. We can put life back in the hair and skin; put the figure into shape and even do a fair job of adding a sparkle to the eye. But we can't grow you a new tooth. Once a permanent tooth is lost, it's lost forever, so attention to your teeth is one thing you simply can't afford to put off.

The first important thing is to include in your diet each day, at least a pint of milk, a quart if possible, plus fresh fruits and vegetables. This is no vague general principle whose results you will not notice. On the contrary, it has been definitely proved that tooth decay in the usual case, can actually be arrested within ten weeks by using diets high in minerals and vitamins. Such a diet would consist chiefly of fresh milk, fruits and vegetables.

Certainly such treatment is much cheaper and less painful than visits to the dentist. Of course dentists are indispensable in correcting dental trouble, but why not prevent?

Now as to brushing the teeth—prob-

Bridge Fans Invited To Tournament

Contract bridge fans of Mokena have just been invited by the Bridge Club of the Marshall Field Garden Apartments to participate in one of the most interesting bridge tournaments ever held. Although mailed invitations have been sent to many players in previous tournaments, the News-Bulletin is authorized to announce that all players in Mokena are invited.

The tournament, which is under the direction of Mr. P. D. Parcels, one of the outstanding bridge players in the United States and winner of several national and sectional championships, is to be held in the auditorium of the Marshall Field Garden Apartments, 411 Blackhawk St., Chicago, and is being sponsored by the Bridge Club of the Marshall Field Garden Apartments, of which Mr. James Beverly is president.

No entry fee is being charged for this tournament, but there will be handsome prizes each night for top score, north, south and east, west in each section; as well as four prizes for the highest scores made, north, south and east, west. In addition, there will be two grand prizes for the best scores for the entire tournament.

Play will start at 8 p. m., Tuesday August 29, and will be continued each Tuesday evening for five successive weeks. Entrants are asked to send their name, address, and telephone numbers to the Bridge Club of the Marshall Field Garden Apartments, Bridge Club or telephone them to Lincoln 2122.

The tournament, it was explained, is in no sense of the word a "championship" event, but is for the average players who enjoy an evening of bridge as a pastime. Immediately after each evening's session, an opportunity will be given all players to ask questions of Mr. Parcels or any of his assistants concerning any feature of the game.

Fellowship of Faiths Big Event

"This first World Fellowship of Faiths will be recognized as the outstanding event of the Century," said Rajah Jai Prithvi Bahadur Singh, a Prince of Nepal, recently, in his first Chicago address. "Never before," he explained, "have the representatives of all Faiths, Races and Countries come together, not for a competitive parade of rival religions (as in the first Parliament of Religions held at Chicago's first World's Fair in 1893) but, as your statement of purpose says 'To Unite the Inspiration of ALL FAITHS upon the Solution of Man's Present Problems."

Two hundred and forty seven eminent speakers have agreed to address the sixty sessions, this Summer of this "Epoch Making Congress as the World Fellowship of Faiths has been called. "It will do more than all the parliaments and congresses of the world to combat the evil influences of war," wrote H. Dennis Bradley of London, England, a member of the British committee who sponsored several preparatory Fellowships of faith in the City Temple, London.

Six of this Summer's sixty sessions have been held. Secretary H. A. Wallace of the U. S. Department of Agriculture, heading the program for the seventh session, Friday evening, August 18, in the large assembly hall of hotel Morrison, Chicago, will discuss "Machinery, Economics and Religion." Arriving from India for this meeting, Champat Rai Jain, Esq., will represent the Jain religion of India, little known in America. From Constantinople, Turkey, Dean Edgar J. Fisher of Robert College, brings vital news of current movements towards world unity in the Balkans. Rajah Jai Prithvi Bahadur Singh of Nepal, will again address the assembly.

The "Culminating Convention Period" of this World Fellowship of Faiths extends for three weeks, August 27 to September 17 with 2 or 3 public sessions every day in the large assembly halls of the Morrison Hotel.

Will County Farmers To Hear About Wheat Prices

The Federal Government has adopted a plan for adjusting the price of wheat in such a manner that a bushel of wheat will buy as much in non-agricultural commodities as it did in the five years previous to the World War. This plan is available to all men who have grown wheat during the past three years provided they are willing to cooperate with the government in an effort to reduce the acreage seeded to wheat and thus prevent the burdensome surpluses, which now exist, from having a continued depressing effect upon the price of wheat.

It is highly important that every wheat grower become familiar with the details of this plan in order that he may fully understand his responsibilities and the benefits that will accrue to him under the plan. The government is depending upon the extension service to hold a sufficient number of meetings in each wheat growing county that every grower may have an opportunity to know at first hand the details of the plan.

In Will County the Farm Bureau has arranged, with the assistance of a group of interested wheat growers, the following series of meetings where the plan will be presented and plenty of opportunity will be given for a thorough discussion of its provisions. All wheat growers are invited to these meetings and they should feel free to bring with them any friend or neighbor who may be interested in this plan. Should any farmer have any question in his mind as to its provisions, Farm Adviser Leonard W. Braham trusts such farmer will feel free to state those questions at the meeting. It will help the program very considerably if every wheat grower is present at one of this first series of meetings. The meetings will be held as follows:

Lutheran Hall, Wheatland, Friday, August 18; Town Hall, Homer, Tuesday, August 22; Farm Bureau Office, Joliet, Wednesday, August 23; Jackson Grange Hall, Thursday, August 24; Wilmington, Friday, August 25; Wilton Community Hall, Monday, August 28; Manhattan Grange Hall, Wednesday, August 30 and Beecher Community Hall, Friday, Sept. 1.

tending the furnace in a Gas Heated house

Gas Heat ends all dirt, grime, labor, and drudgery

To prove that every home can afford to heat with gas...we will install it at our expense and remove it at our expense, if you don't like it.

GAS heat is this easy and simple! You don't need to go near the furnace. No shoveling coal, no hauling ashes, no setting dampers. No fuel supply to run low in zero weather. One touch of the thermostat, controls your heat perfectly, day and night.

But perhaps you say, "Yes, of course, I know gas heat is the perfect heat. But it costs too much."

New low costs for gas heat

Then here's great news for you. Gas heat now costs less than half what it did in 1930-31. A luxury priced for the majority. A wonderful convenience, now within your reach.

To prove it—and we take the full burden of proof—we'll install it in your home without your making one cent of investment.

During the nine heating months of the first year you pay $3.00 a month rental for the equipment in the average home. This charge will be included with your gas bill. And if for any reason during the first year you want it removed, we take it out and the rental charge stops immediately. Further, we replace your former heating equipment in the same or better condition than we found it. If you decide you want it, the rental applies on the purchase price.

Automatic gas heat promotes better health. No ups and downs of temperature which may start winter colds and coughs. No dust or grime to inhale. No odor. Gas heat saves cleaning bills and endless housework. Walls and paper stay clean year after year. Hangings stay up all winter long. There's no greasy smudge. No dirt-tracked stairs and rugs.

Food At The Fair

ONE of the most interesting food exhibits at the Century of Progress International Exposition in Chicago is that of Standard Brands Incorporated. The large and impressive circular building erected by this Corporation is modernistic in design, to conform with the architectural plan of the entire exposition, and is housed in a central location in the Agricultural Building.

The keynote of this striking exhibit is the vast and efficient delivery system of this Corporation which insures the delivery of its products in the freshest possible state to the consumer. This is shown in a relief frieze, encircling the lower part of the building, which portrays the various modes of rapid transportation. A circular relief map showing the strategic position of the Corporation's factories and agencies in the United States and Canada is also included.

The Corporation is making use of an unusual method of display to feature its products. These displays called "dioramas" consist of pictures in three dimensions, with the foreground modeled in perspective, so that it blends in unity with a painted background, thus giving an illusion of distance. Some of the subjects treated this way are Pasteur at work in his laboratory, a tea plantation, the Corporation's Peckskill factory, modern coffee delivery and others.

The history of baking is portrayed on the upper half of the interior wall space. This is done by means of exceptionally well executed mural paintings directly on gold tecko, tracing the art of baking from primitive man to present practices.

The Corporation also has another exhibit, located in the Hall of Science. This is scientific in nature, dealing with such subjects as yeast growth, vitamin D research, and other contributions of science to the making of better foods.

SYNOPSIS

A pretty young woman finds herself in a taxicab in New York with a strange man who addresses her endearingly and speaks of "an awful shock." When he leaves her for a moment at a drug store she drives on, for she fears him. She stops at the Biltmore, still wondering who she is. Her memory is gone. From her expensive clothing she concludes she is married to a wealthy man. She meets a young woman who speaks of her desire to go to Reno for a divorce, if she can get the money. The woman vanishes with the nameless girl's purse and $900. An elderly woman, Mrs. Oscar Du Val, cordially greets the nameless girl, addressing her as "Doris," wife of Mrs. Du Val's son, Rocky. Rocky is abroad, and Doris, bewildered, is taken to the home of Mrs. Du Val and her sculptor husband, Oscar.

The last box contained merely hats and shoes to go with the dresses. Doris Du Val didn't believe in carrying papers around, evidently.

The search had yielded the information that yellow and lavender were her favorite colors and that she had undoubtedly been rich. Nothing more.

Was Rocky really her husband? She peered again with strained eyes into the pictured face. If he could only speak! If he could only tell her who she was, where they had met. Gently, gradually, she felt sure she would come back to connection with her past if she could only see him.

It seemed to her as she looked into those serious boyish eyes as if she must remember. Surely the time he had given her the ring. Some of that might come back. She sat turning the ring over and over and pondering. But it was useless.

Mrs. Du Val tapped on the door softly. An hour had passed in these thoughts.

"Come in," said Doris. "Oh, oh! C'est tres mauvais! Verree bad! You must rest. At such a time young girls must rest, and not tire themselves out."

Doris was getting rather weary of being told that at "such a time" she must take care of herself. The such a time seemed to be always. But she smiled. "I was just going to get dressed for dinner."

"Oh no," said Mrs. Du Val. "We live very simply. Do not dress tonight. It is too exhausting at such a—"

"I'll just wash my face then," said Doris hastily. She disappeared into the bathroom half expecting to be told that "at such a time" girls shouldn't wash. Then she smiled ruefully, ashamed of her impatience.

The drawing room was attractive with flowers and books. Alone there for a moment Doris looked about for a newspaper. Unable to find one, she turned on the radio.

Instantly an orchestra blared. An avalanche of jazz poured into the room, flooded the whole quiet countryside. Almost immediately there was another and larger roar from the hall outside. Oscar Du Val, his white hair disarranged, his black eyes rolling angrily, rushed in.

"Turn it off! Turn it off!" he shouted.

Amazed and frightened, Doris ran to obey. As the sound was cut off, Du Val looked at her blushing furiously. "I am sorry," he said, "I am very sorry. I did not think it was you. The servants have orders never to touch the radio."

"I didn't know," said Doris. "I'm sorry."

Mrs. Du Val had darted into the room.

"Roaring like a mad bull at our little girl," she scolded.

Du Val looked heartbroken. "Oh, I am so sorry."

"Making noise like one hundred elephants and frightening our little girl at such a time!"

But Oscar Du Val now looked more frightened than Doris.

Mrs. Du Val turned to Doris. "You see what it is to live with an artist. You can thank your stars that I brought up my son to be a business man. Oscar cannot work with the radio going. He does not like to have the outside world come to him."

"Yes, to be told I must wash my teeth every day. Me, I have never been to the dentist in my life."

"He will not have anything come into the house. No radio! No newspapers! Such a man! We never play the radio except on Sunday afternoons when we love to listen to the Philharmonic concerts."

"Yes," said Oscar eagerly. He looked at Doris as if pleading with her to understand. "The Philharmonic concerts are very nice. I like them very much."

The evening passed quickly. Listening to the talk of the famous sculptor, Doris nearly forgot all about her own worry. She felt that if she had not already fallen in love with the son, she might find herself tempted to marry him anyway for the pleasure of having such a father-in-law.

"Rockwell St. Gardens is a great friend of yours, isn't he?" asked Doris when the talk had come to a little pause.

"Ah, yes," said Oscar. "A great friend. We named our Rocky for him. His work is magnificent—magnificent. You know it of course?"

"Oh yes," said Doris, a little surprised to find that she did. "I suppose," she said after a pause in which she considered how she happened to have this particular piece of knowledge, "that he is like you. I mean—every one knows something of his work."

"Yes, he has become very famous. It is hard to realize that. I remember him always as a wild crazy one in Paris. We were young then, n'est-ce pas? But now we are so no longer. And I—I have my practical little wife, my fine son who has his own good wife, and Rockwell St. Gardens lives very respectably too—up in northern New England near the Canadian border, where it is too cold for me."

"Early in July we will visit him," said Mrs. Du Val. "We will go up to his daughter's wedding."

"Yes," said Oscar, "that is so. Beatrice is to be married in July."

Mrs. Du Val's voice often trembled on a note of ecstasy so fragile that overtones of despair and sadness could be heard beyond her joy. "Rocky will be back by then and we will all go together."

Doris felt the tremor of happiness behind the mother's words. It caught a response in her. Could it possibly be true that in six weeks she would be the normal, happy, remembering wife of Rocky? It must be so.

She went to bed early. The sounds of bullfrogs and crickets lulled her quickly to sleep. Her last thought was that she would wake up in the morning knowing all about her past.

But the next day everything was the same. She felt secure and full of happiness. She was in her right place, and Rocky's picture was on her dressing table.

She thought of her new family. Mrs. Du Val—"Mother" was a dear, and she seemed really to like Doris. She reviewed her eventful yesterday with tranquility. All that fright about the man in the cab had been so useless, so silly. Anyway, it was all before she knew that she had this quiet refuge, before she had even seen Rocky's picture. She took it up now and studied it thoughtfully for the twentieth time.

Her husband! Where had she met him? How long had she known him? Not long, apparently. She had gathered this from her welcome.

And yet Mrs. Du Val had met her before. Mrs. Du Val had recognized her in the Biltmore! Or had she? Doris shut her eyes again, and tried to imagine the scene. Mrs. Du Val's greeting had been something about how beautiful she was. Could it be possible that Mrs. Du Val as well as her husband had never seen Rocky's wife before?

It was too confusing. Today her memory would return. It must! It would! It had to!

But it just didn't. The more she willed to know, the more the curtain of the past seemed to shut down on her, blanker than the unknown future on which she could at least make a few tentative plans of her own. As spring passed it seemed strange to be married to a photograph, married to someone who was a topic of conversation at every breakfast, luncheon and dinner, and yet whom she had never seen.

The days were always the same. Doris could understand why Rocky didn't come home much if he were at all the type that liked gaiety. For at nine o'clock promptly every night the family went to bed. And at six o'clock the next morning it was time to get up. From six-thirty until noon Mr. Du Val worked in his studio.

After lunch he worked again. Meanwhile his wife occupied herself with the house, superintending the gardening, the dairies, the farm. Aside from her work in running the huge place, Mrs. Du Val spent much of her time in acting as a guard to her husband against the outside world. Hardly a day passed that did not bring a group of tourists eager to see the sculptor at his work. His wife kept them away from him. If she hadn't it would have soon become impossible for him to work, for they would have swamped him, overwhelmed him. He lived in his work, and he was utterly dependent on his wife, who made it possible for him to work so steadily and ardently.

"It is dull for you here, Doris?" he would say sometimes at lunch. "No, no. I love the quiet of the country. And besides there's really a lot to do."

"Yes," said Mrs. Du Val. "We sew, we make new curtains for Doris and Rocky's bedroom."

Doris was really learning a great deal. Already the peas and asparagus were being canned in the big kitchen. She had helped start dandelion wine, seen the red currants come off the bushes, watched them bubble in enormous pots. Mrs. Du Val was making bar-le-due "such as you will not get, my Doris, this side of the water."

There was a batch of new setter puppies. Doris was weaning them. This occupied much of her attention. Then there were many vases in the big house to be filled with flowers. This had become Doris' task. There was, as Doris had said, a lot to do. And she enjoyed doing it.

Every night she fell asleep dreaming about Rocky. She had moments it is true, of doubting that anyone could be so perfect as the son Mrs. Du Val talked of constantly. But when she looked into his pictured eyes she believed them all. Somewhere in the blank past he had told her that he loved her. They had married each other. She almost believed she remembered it.

Besides his mother's stories, she had listened to his father's description (tinged with a humorous irony) of Rocky's business career. And gradually she had formed a picture of this Rocky Du Val to whom she was married. He emerged now as a lover, a person more real than anyone she had ever met. She looked eagerly toward the day when he would write to her because she thought that certainly when she looked at the intimate words of her husband, written to her, his wife, she would remember and know for all time what she still groped and wondered over.

Meantime she thought of him as being the tall careless type fond of outdoor life. "He likes outdoor life when it isn't too strenuous," Mr. Du Val had chuckled. Mrs. Du Val said that like his father he made friends everywhere, but he had inherited his keen business sense from his mother. He had had a recent promotion in his firm which would send him to Paris frequently.

But no letter came. A week passed, and another week. June came, bringing roses and peonies, a festive setting for Rocky's return. Then Mrs. Du Val got a letter from him, but of Doris it said only, "Doris strikes me as being very husky, so there is no need to worry about her. Just see that she gets plenty of sunshine and goes to bed early every night."

This sounded far from loverlike and Doris felt suddenly cold all over when Mrs. Du Val read it aloud to her. Mrs. Du Val seemed also to feel some lack in it, for she said consolingly, "Your letter will come tomorrow."

But it didn't come, though Doris began wistfully to watch for the mailman's daily visits. The words, "there is no need to worry about her," made Doris wonder again if her young husband did know of the condition in which she found herself mentally. Had the Du Vals, after all, suspected it? Was that why Mrs. Du Val was constantly fussing over her, urging gentle exercise on her, making her take naps, begging her to take sunbaths, and forever babbling about, "such a time?"

No. That was impossible. The Du Vals showed no sign of guessing that Doris could not remember anything. Yet Rocky's letter left her more than slightly disquieted. The old doubts came back. Supposing she were not Rocky's wife. Supposing Mrs. Du Val had mistaken her in the Biltmore? What on earth should she do if Rocky came back and repudiated her?

She spent hours brooding now on this situation. She ought to go to New York and make some effort to locate her rightful place. Supposing her memory never came back? For over a month had passed now, and she was beginning to lose that first expectancy that had buoyed up her spirits.

"What is the matter, Doris? You look pale today. You need rest."

"No, no, I'm all right." Rest meant returning to her nightmare imaginings: if Rocky was not her husband then she must go back to the other.

"Tell me what is troubling you, dear?"

She considered taking Mrs. Du Val into her confidence. If she found out that Doris had lost her memory there was no telling what she would do. As it was, she was always talking about taking Doris to the doctor. She could not tell Mrs. Du Val now after all these weeks of deception.

But she really ought to go into New York and see if she couldn't find out something. Supposing she went to Tange's—the store where she had bought most of her trousseau. The label with its Fifth avenue address was on all of her clothes. Perhaps some clerk there would recognize her, and tell her for sure if she was Mrs. Rockwell Du Val. That was something she must do before Rocky came home. And he was due home in a week.

SAMUEL

LESSON TEXT—I Samuel 3:1-10; 12:1-4.

GOLDEN TEXT—And Samuel said unto the people, Fear not: ye have done all this wickedness: yet turn not aside from following the Lord, but serve the Lord with all your heart.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Samuel Talking to God.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Samuel Listening to God.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Training for Service.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Responding to God's Call.

I. Samuel's Birth (1:1-20).

He was given to Hannah in answer to her prayer. His name means "asked of God."

II. Samuel Lent to the Lord (1:24-28).

In connection with Hannah's prayer for a man child, she vowed to give him to God. He was to be a Nazirite all the days of his life. In fulfillment of her vow, she took him at an early age to the sanctuary and gave him over to the charge of Eli, the priest, to minister therein.

III. Samuel Called of God (3:1-10).

Dwelling within the sacred courts and ministering before the Lord with Eli, is the innocent Samuel who is to become the saviour of his people. In Samuel we have a striking pattern of child religion. The Lord gave him in answer to his mother's prayer, and from his birth he was dedicated to the Lord. In the Scriptures we have set forth two types of experience; the one experiencing the saving grace of God after having lived in sin; the other of one brought up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord from his infancy.

Two traits of Samuel's character stand out in his call—his cheerful obedience to the Lord's call, and his surrendered will.

IV. Samuel Established in the Prophetic Office (3:11-21).

Up to this time Samuel obeyed Eli. The time has now come when he must directly hear and obey the Lord. The first message entrusted to him was a most terrible one. It doubtless was a bitter experience to Eli to see Samuel recognized, and himself passed by, but he was submissive. This fearful visitation upon Eli's house was due to the sins of his sons. Eli was accountable because he had not restrained them. He was a good man, but lax in the discipline of his children. Samuel grew and the Lord was with him and did not let any of his words fall to the ground. So fully did the Lord bless his ministry that all Israel knew that he was established as the Lord's prophet.

V. Samuel, the Judge (7:1-17).

1. People called to forsake their idols (vv. 1-6). Because of their sins God permitted the nation to be bitterly oppressed by the Philistines. Samuel promised them deliverance on condition of repentance (v. 3).

2. Samuel prayed for the people (vv. 7-14). In response to his prayer God miraculously delivered them from the Philistines. This victory was memorialized by the setting up of the stone called Ebenezer (v. 12).

3. Samuel judging Israel (vv. 15-17). Bethel, Gilgal, Mizpeh, and Ramah were his circuit, to each of which he made annual visits. These centers were for the accommodation of the people.

4. Samuel's final address (12:1-25). When Saul, the new king, was crowned, Samuel graciously retired, turning over to him the nation's affairs.

a. Samuel's challenge to the people (vv. 1-5). He reminded them of the way the king had been given and showed their direct responsibility for the change in government. He reviewed his own administration, showing his walk from childhood, and his career as judge and ruler. To this the people responded by a vote of confidence. It was Samuel's right as he laid down the reins of government to have his records vindicated.

b. Samuel reviews God's dealings with the nation from the time of Moses (vv. 6-15). He showed them that national prosperity was conditioned upon obedience (v. 14). Though they had displeased God in choosing a king, if they would fear the Lord and render obedience, national prosperity would still be given them.

c. Samuel's personal vindication (vv. 16-25). The hour was so critical in the nation's history that Samuel sought to indelibly impress upon their hearts its meaning. This he did by praying for thunder and rain out of season. They saw this as an example of God's mighty power which, if directed against them, would destroy them instantly.

He Turned to Prayer

He lived in the atmosphere of prayer from first to last; and when any specially important work had to be done, any specially difficult crisis had to be faced, any specially trying experience had to be endured, he met it by special prayer.—G. H. Knight.

Thank God Daily

Thank God every morning when you get up that you have something to do that day that must be done, whether you like it or not.

HOW THEY GOT IT

There is a man who yearns to fill his house with comforts, while his wife yearns to fill it with antiques. Her pet theory is that in pawnshops one may find many treasured heirlooms.

"I suppose this was handed down to you by some great-great-grandfather," said a visitor, tapping a snuff box. "No," replied the brutal husband, "it was second-handed down to us by an 'uncle'."

Theological Mainspring

Two ministers were driving in a cab to the station, and were in some anxiety lest they should miss their train. One of them pulled out his watch and discovered it had stopped. "How annoying!" he exclaimed. "And I always put such faith in that watch!"

"In a case like this," answered the other, "good works would evidently have answered the purpose better."—Christian Advocate.

How It Happened

Windows are something we can see through, was the way he wrote it. Widows are something we can see through, is the way the linotype operator finally made it.—Florida Times-Union.

Of Course, Its Dead

She—The hair dresser says there is no life in my hair.

He—That's not strange considering how often it's dyed.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

SAVING THAT, ANYWAY

"Did he lock the door after the horse was stolen?"

"Certainly; he wanted to keep the automobile safe."

Training for a Future

"What will be your son's vocation?" "I think maybe he's practicin' to be a street car conductor," answered Farmer Cornstossel. "He's already tellin' everybody in the family where we get off."—Washington Star.

Just the Eyes

Girl—I have broken my glasses. Will I have to be examined all over again?

Optician—No, only your eyes.—Everybody's Weekly.

Things To Come

Forecast Submitted By Bertha Mae Bliss

In the near future it looks as tho the carpet weavers of the beautiful old patterns will have had their prayers answered, as the looms will be busy to supply the public demand for carpets and rugs. In many cases where sadness has held sway in the home, the purchase of new floor covering and household furniture will bring back much happiness and contentment.

Foreclosures on property will soon be a thing of the past. Sixty per cent of the people who have had foreclosure summons, are still living in their homes. The laws of the home loan plan issued some time ago, and with new laws to be in force during next 3 months will enable those who are employed to keep their property.

By October 17 looks very much as tho the dairy farmer in the smaller localities will step forward and try to organize in a brotherly way. Meetings to be called during the different seasons to discuss new ideas, the price of milk as well as the sanitary delivery of dairy products to the public.

While each individual feels it his duty to cooperate with Pres. Roosevelt's requests, why not feel so inclined to cooperate with the business near at home? The cooperation movement started a long way from home, but the home fires will burn brighter this winter. The N. R. A. movement is meant individually and in a very short time you may be desirous of wearing the pin or button bearing the N. R. A. ensignia which means "You are doing your part"

Never in history has a president been given the cooperation as Pres. Roosevelt is receiving. By September, Pres. Roosevelt will not only have carried out his plea to the people to fill out the N. R. A. blank voluntary, but a house to house canvass will be made and by January 15 working conditions will be more satisfactory to the public. But between January 15 and last of February a demand will be made for a new wage scale and output of merchandise.

Rev. Wiggins of Boston, Mass., quoted a short time ago that Pres. Roosevelt's success is due to the guiding hand of Theodore Roosevelt who also was a worthy president.

Adolph Ceithaml and family who have resided in the north Elmore subdivision the past four years, moved back to Chicago Monday of this week. Their many friends here regret to lose them and wish them much success in their new home.

Mr. Ceithaml is an ex-service man and a member of the Tinley Park Legion Post.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Schoeneck and daughter returned home Monday from a vacation spent at Devil's Lake, Wisconsin.

Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Funk, Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Wyman and grandma Wyman attended the funeral of Geo. Haney, a relative, held in Chicago the forepart of the week. Burial was in the Irving Park cemetery.

The child of Mr. and Mrs. Al Hartwig is very ill.
Francis Harper figured in a minor auto accident the forepart of the week when his auto got out of control and crashed into a telephone pole near the Suhs place.

A truck of the Koenigke Tobacco Company of Blue Island ran into a fire plug in front of Hermsmeyer's place Wednesday afternoon. The only damage was a punctured tire.

The Busy Bee Sewing Circle met at the summer home of Mrs. Lew Goessel at Niles, Michigan last Thursday. Everyone had a lovely time. However, the sewing suffered on account of the lovely beach so handy.

While doing chores Tuesday evening Mr. Henry Brandau fell and hurt his back. The injury was quite painful.

Mr. and Mrs. Ernst Anderson send a "hello to everybody" from Macomb, Illinois by Mr. and Mrs. August Mesenbrink, Walter, Nellie Ann and Clemens. They motored there Sunday and gave them a surprise. It is like getting a letter from home to see old friends and talking is so more satisfactory than letter writing (so says Clemens) and there was a regular talk fest and all enjoyed the trip and visit with them.

Walter Mesenbrink is the proud possessor of the golf loving cup which he won 3 years in succession. The champion golf player took it in the tournament which was played 3 weeks ago. His friends extend their heartiest congratulations and hope that someday he will win in some national game, so keep up your practicing and don't forget what you know.

Mesdames Kehler, and Moss entertained several friends at luncheon Wednesday for the benefit of the R. N. A. After spending two weeks at Clemens "Chuck" returned to Chicago Tuesday leaving sad hearts behind him, but cheer up, he'll be back some day.

Mesdames Keleher, Mesenbrink and Clemens went to the Century of Progress and report if comfortable shoes are worn and style left behind walking won't be such an effort and you won't get as tired as some say so wear your gun boats and have comfort as you see so much, you won't be looking at any one's shoes.

Mrs. Louis Goessel had several friends motor to Michigan last Thursday to visit with her. Those in the party were Mrs. Hirsch, Mrs. Brandau, Mrs. Val. Scheer and Mrs. E. Hirsch and they report a good time.

Mr. and Mrs. F. Hick and daughters are vacationing in Holland, Michigan.

Mrs. E. Goham had guests from Oklahoma Monday.

How to Eat for Health and Beauty

In this unusual photograph of the famous Bennett hair and eyes, Connie proves that her beauty can stand the closest scrutiny.

SUMMER wind and sun are hard on hair as well as skin, so take time to massage nourishing oils into your scalp as well as your face. And nourish your scalp and hair from the inside, too, by taking an abundance of such healthful foods as fresh milk, fruits and vegetables and eggs, because trying to have gleaming, lustrous hair by means of shampoos, scalp treatments and waves alone, is a losing struggle as anyone who has noticed how the beauty of her hair varies with the condition of her general health, can testify.

Public Service Co., Signs NRA Codes

The Public Service Company of Northern Illinois this week signed the NRA codes for gas and electric utilities prepared by the American Gas Association and the Edison Electric Institute and approved by the NRA at Washington, according to a statement issued from the company's general offices this week.

The statement says that this move will add substantially to the expenses of the company but that increased work will be given to present part-time employees and former employees will be recalled as rapidly as may be needed. Inasmuch as the Company operates 24 hours a day and requires highly trained and skilled men, the adjustment of hours presents many difficult problems which are now being worked out by the operating organization.

In a statement issued earlier this week, the Company's Vice Chairman, George A. Ranney, said: "The Public Service Company is in full sympathy and accord with President Roosevelt's program for industrial recovery."
